With the super bowl last weekend and Valentine's day this weekend, we are hearing that the pressure and available of product should get back to normal over the next week. Temperatures in both the Salinas Valley and Yuma are expected to be higher than normal causing the usual issues with quality. The producers have ensured that their teams are taking more care while picking and packing the product for shipment. While still have a good selection of citrus available, we are hearing that the Bakersfield area of California is experiencing wetter and cooler than normal temperatures causing harvesting delays which could affect the market over the next few weeks.

While still available, we continue to see limited product arriving from our local and mainland suppliers.
